

I have been a customer of At&t Wireless since 2001. I stuck with my original voice plan through the Cingular merger of the mid 2000s, and then the re-branding back to AT&T. AT&T is now forcing me off my old plan because they say I need to get a new SIM card in order to for it to be compatible on their "upgraded" network. They no longer offer a comparable plan to my current one, so I am forced to either purchase a more expensive plan with them, or switch providers. I have a phone which is less than two years old and is designed to run the current GSM network, the only other GSM provider is T-Mobile. With all the trouble AT&T is putting me through, I would like to switch providers. If AT&T acquires T-Mobile, I will be back to the same old problem. I do not support this proposed merger because it is bad for consumers (such as myself) and it is bad for competition. It seems that this proposed merger would be in clear violation of established United States antitrust laws. Thank you for your consideration.

David Rodriguez